EURODAC (European dactyloscopy, i.e. fingerprinting) was established in 2000 to assist in the implementation of the "Dublin" rules for determining the member state responsible for processing an asylum application. It currently stores the fingerprints of people who have registered an application for international protection in an EU member state, and persons apprehended in connection with irregular border crossings.

In 2020, almost 650 000 sets of fingerprints were transmitted to the central system. Since 2016 negotiations have been ongoing on new rules that would massively expand the system as part of the EU's plans to ramp up deportations. New types of data will be stored – including facial images – and it will be gathered from more people, in particular by lowering the minimum age for data collection to six (it is currently 14) and requiring the collection of data from new categories of person (regular migrants, people disembarked following search and rescue operations, people eligible for resettlement within the EU). The revamped Eurodac will also form a key part of the EU's "interoperability" architecture, which seeks to interconnect a number of large-scale databases to make the data more readily accessible to the authorities.
